Heart vigil for Silvio

FORMER Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi was diagnosed with a minor heart complaint yesterday after fainting at a rally.

Berlusconi, who beat prostate cancer in the 1990s, said he was going to Milan's San Raffaele hospital where he would stay the night.

The 70-year-old, third from the left, added: "They found something on the electrocardiogram, something like an irregular heartbeat, so they want to keep me under observation for 24 hours."

Two-thirds of English want split with Scots

THE majority of voters in Scotland AND England now back the break-up of the United Kingdom.

And more than two-thirds of the English want to have their own parliament like the Scots.

Political watchers suggested last night it could mean the break-up of the UK may be just a few years away.

As the debate grows increasingly bitter, English voters say they are fed-up with Scots being given more each in state help.

Troubled

Leaders of all three political parties, none of which support a break-up, are said to be deeply troubled by the latest survey of 1,003 Scots and 869 English by polling organisation ICM.

Tory leader David Cameron said: "The union between England, Scotland and Wales is good for us all and we are stronger together than we are apart."

"The last thing we need is yet another parliament with separate elections and more politicians spending more money."

LibDem leader Sir Menzies Campbell

■ by CAMERON MILLAR

called for a "calm rational debate" on the role of MPs from Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales at Westminster.

More than 60% of English voters have grave concerns over the fact Scottish MPs at Westminster can vote on solely English matters - while many purely Scots issues are decided from Edinburgh.

Even 46% of Scots don't agree with it, while more than half of all Scots say they want the nation to cut ties with its bigger neighbour and go it alone.

And 59% of the English want Scots to break away, while 68% say they want a parliament for England.

The poll also revealed that the English are more likely to think of themselves as British than Scots are.

Scottish Chancellor Gordon Brown delivered a keynote speech defending the Union two days ago, claiming victory for the Scottish National Party would ruin Scotland.

He said: "We should never let the Nationalists deceive people into believing you can break up the United Kingdom."

Slave sadness

TONY Blair expressed his "deep sorrow" yesterday for Britain's role in the slave trade.

Deputy PM John Prescott has been drawing up ideas to commemorate next year's bicentenary of the abolition of slavery, but has ruled out a formal apology.

Mr Blair said: "The bicentenary offers us a chance not just to say how profoundly shameful the slave trade was, how we condemn its existence utterly and praise those who fought for its abolition, but also to express our deep sorrow that it could ever have happened."

MATT: I'm only gay in Tardis

WHO FAN:
Matt Lucas
as Dafydd
with Tardis

LITTLE Britain comic Matt Lucas is such a huge fan of Doctor Who he's bought a full-size replica Tardis.

The Dafydd star splashed out on the time-travel machine as a gift for lover Kevin McGee. And now it has pride of place in their new home. A pal revealed yesterday: "They both love watching the Time Lord. And when Matt heard there was a Tardis up for sale he just had to have it."

"He's been joking he's not just the only gay in the village. He's now the only gay in the Tardis."

Silly

The pal added: "Kevin was over the moon. Matt's looking to get him a Dalek next."

Matt, 32, and partner Kevin, 30, who live in north London, are due to tie the knot next month in a civil partnership ceremony.

Matt said of telly producer Kevin: "He's as childish and as silly as me. He really makes me laugh."

"We've just bought this nice big house and there's a big Tardis in the middle of it."

Meanwhile, Matt has "exterminated" claims of a rift between himself and Little Britain sidekick David Walliams.

It was reported the pair were at loggerheads

by PAUL MALLEY

over the future of the hit show. But Matt insisted: "When David suggests things, I'm a weak man and I say 'Yes'."

But he did have a poke at funnymen David, 35, for getting a kick out of dressing up as "laydee" Emily Howard.

"I don't get any particular rush dressing up as a woman. David, does enjoy that, I sense."

Pit torture for Mal and Dean

MALANDRA Burrows had to face a night of torture locked up with Dean Gaffney.

The pair volunteered for the most frightening challenge called the Jungle Pit.

They put themselves forward for a mystery task to win a full breakfast for the campers.

But it was only after they had volunteered that they were told what it entailed.

The couple were taken off away from the camp to the pit which was crawling with rats, spiders and snakes. They had to sleep in hammocks with just a kerosene lamp for light and rice and water to survive on.

by PETER DYKE

Shocked Dean, 28, said: "I can't believe this. Everyone else is dining thanks to Mylene and we're stuck here."

"That lot are getting the best of both worlds. They get dinner."

"And then if we stick it out they get a full breakfast."

Malandra, 40, said: "This isn't like being in a tank for ten minutes, this is a torture chamber."

"This is all night."

Meanwhile, David Gest gave Jan Leeming a shock by asking if she would consider getting hitched to him.

However, after five failed marriages, she turned him down.

Stunned

The 53-year-old concert promoter stunned her by asking: "If I was a little bit older would you marry me?"

"I find you interesting and attractive."

But former newsreader Jan, 64, who claimed she'd never date a man under the age of 55, told him: "I'll never marry anybody again."

"You don't know the half of me."

Then saucy David asked her: "What do you think of one-offs?"

A shocked Jan told him bluntly: "I'm not into that I'm afraid."

"Not into one-night stands."

"They look in the mirror more than the girls," bitched evicted Scott.

JASON's dad, Neighbours actor Terence Donovan, reckons his son will win because he's used to the Aussie outback after camping as a boy scout.

MATT is missing the booze. He moaned: "In the real world I can walk to the pub. Here I have to beg for beer."

JUST minutes after Faith was evicted, Phina told Jan she could take over the comedienne's treehouse bed - to avoid another row.

DAVID's threat to quit has rubbed off on Matt and Lauren who say they are ready to go.

LEGGY: Jan swings in tongue. And it was like a nine-minute kiss."

DEAN and Matt are the vainest celebs.

Jungle Grapevine...

HERE is the roos! Former BBC girl Jan Leeming donned comedy kangaroo legs for the celebrity chest challenge yesterday.

But despite her and Matt grabbing the chest, they failed to get the goodies inside.

Amazingly, having had five husbands herself, Jan failed to guess what percentage of marriages end in divorce.

DAVID maintains that his revolting slumpy wedding kiss to Liza Minnelli for the cameras was for real.

He said: "The kiss is the thing that is so famous."

"I was so excited and so in love. It looked like I was a shark going in and I took every part of her mouth out with my

Mr 'Can Do' can do no wrong. We especially like the fact he doesn't like Phina and has sussed what a cow she is. He's got 10 good reasons to kick her out!

MATT

Cheeky chappie ran off with Jan. Thankfully it was just for a challenge. But no wonder he's begging for booze. Two weeks with that whinger would make anyone crack.

DEAN

He thinks he's James Bond doing all those challenges. But judging by his hilarious 'acting', we think he's much more Johnny English. Double O Zero!

JAN

Loving the fact that she's pushing Phina to the limit. With Scott gone, it's about time we had another girlie fight in camp. Bring it on girl!

She's been shaking her fat booty and singing reggae again. Will she be writing what an embarrassment she is to the Blairs in her secret diary?

MYLEENE A REAL SUPER STAR

Lauren and Phina in bitchfest after she braves hell tomb

INSIDE: TOMB OF TERROR

TAKING THE HISS: Myleene in Tomb Of Torment where she braved snakes and rats

COURAGEOUS Myleene Klass has been reduced to tears after being targeted by jealous bush bullies.

The 28-year-old telly babe proved herself a real Jungle Jane after scoring the highest number of stars in a terrifying "Tomb Of Torment" Bushtucker Trial.

She had to tough it out for nine minutes inside a vertical coffin while it was filled with water, rats and eels. But Myleene - who has had a phobia about the dark since childhood - won a full quota of food for the starving campers.

When jubilant Myleene went back to camp, she hoped her fellow celebs would be excited by her success.

But Phina Oruche, 31, and Lauren Booth, 39, decided to secretly stick the knife in.

Stinks

The dastardly duo stayed on their beds and refused to get up to congratulate her.

Instead they bitched about her behind her back - jealous that her bravery might land her the title of Queen Of The Jungle.

All Lauren could bring herself to say was: "That girl stinks of eel juice." But later - realising the cameras were on her - she gushed: "Myleene is a little pocket of energy. She is Wonder Woman."

Myleene was at first oblivious to their cruel bitching. But later she realised that the pair had not rushed to join in the celebrations and got

by PETER DYKE

upset. She quietly headed away from the camp for a cry. A show source said: "Myleene was distraught that her big moment was ruined by those two."

"She thought - despite all the ups and downs - that everyone could be friends because we are days away from the final."

"But now she's aware there are a few big snakes in camp who can't be trusted. They are clearly jealous and see her as a threat."

Two-faced Phina is finding herself increasingly isolated in camp and is fast running out of pals now comedienne Faith Brown, 65, has gone.

Nerve

She has failed to get along with former newsreader Jan Leeming, 64, and has threatened to "lamp her one".

And the Footie Wives star had the nerve to say: "I think she's been talking about me behind my back."

She also has trouble getting on with show favourite Jason Donovan, 38. She added: "I think he struggles with me."

"If we see each other and no-one else is around we don't speak." Lauren has also had spats with campers and plans to get her own back by writing a secret jungle diary. She intends to get it published when the show ends.

Detectives probe poisoned spy's mysterious friend

by IAIN BURCHELL
DETECTIVES were yesterday probing the Italian academic who met ex-Russian spy Alexander Litvinenko shortly before he was poisoned.

Prof Mario Scaramella met the doomed agent in a London sushi bar before Litvinenko fell ill and died 22 days later in hospital from radioactive polonium 210.

Mr Litvinenko regarded the stocky Italian as a friend - but yesterday the internet was full of claims that he was a spy with connections to the Russian security services.

Prof Scaramella denies any involvement in Mr Litvinenko's death and says he is co-operating with Scotland Yard's probe.

But officers want to know why many of the universities he claims to have worked at have never heard of him.

And why the "environmentalist" had in-depth knowledge of the movement of nuclear materials and the whereabouts of Russian spies.

Difficult

Others asked why he needed to hand documents to Mr Litvinenko, 43 - who died on Thursday night after being poisoned with the polonium 210 - when he could have emailed them.

Prof Scaramella claims to have worked at an impressive range of universities around the world, but attempts to find anyone who had heard of him at any of them proved difficult.

At Italy's University of Naples, a Dr Maria Scaramella said she would often get post addressed to her namesake, but had never been able to find him to pass it on.

"He was supposed to have an office on the third floor, but I could never find it," she said.

Detectives will also trek to Moscow to try and unravel the mystery, and are trying to identify a Viktor Kirov, who Litvinenko identified as the spy ordered to track him.

From his deathbed, Mr Litvinenko accused Russian President Vladimir Putin of poisoning him, a feeling supported by the dead man's family.

Last night Prof Scaramella said: "I am co-operating with the authorities. I have nothing to add. I have mentioned all this to Scotland Yard."

ian.burchell@dailystar.co.uk

Nurses go missing

TWELVE nurses at the hospital which treated Litvinenko refused to turn up for work after it was announced he died from radiation poisoning.

A source at University College Hospital in London said: "Most staff are carrying on as normal, that's their job. But there were at least 12 nurses who apparently did not turn up for work on Saturday."

Around 100 hospital staff who were near him in his final days have been urged to take radiation contamination tests by the Health Protection Agency's radiation protection division.

Police confirmed they found traces of radiation at the Itsu sushi bar, Piccadilly, London.

Decontamination work started there yesterday, where up to 1,000 diners visited on the day Litvinenko was there.

Last night the HPA also urged anybody who went to the sushi bar or the Pine Bar in the Millennium Hotel, Mayfair, London, to contact NHS Direct on a special hotline number 0845 4647.

BORIS BEREZOVSKY: Academic turned businessman who made a fortune in Russia after the fall of Communism. Was an ally of Putin until they fell out after

MARIO SCARAMELLA: Italian security consultant and academic who had a meeting with Litvinenko on the day he fell ill. Litvinenko had previously given him information, including a tip about Ukrainians trying to smuggle grenades into Italy to kill an Italian ANDREI LUGOVOY, left: Former FSB agent who now runs a security firm in Moscow. Met Litvinenko in London hours before he fell ill. Lugovoy says he was in London for a football match and had a meeting with Litvinenko and a colleague simply to discuss a business deal.

ALEX GOLDFARB: Russian friend of Litvinenko and director of the International pays thousands for him to get a new anti-drug implant

ANTI-HEROINE

by NADINE LINGE

JUNKIE rocker Pete Doherty has a new anti-heroin implant . . . paid for by his model girlfriend Kate Moss.

The 27-year-old Babyshambles frontman jetted off to an exclusive rehab centre in Portugal to have the device inserted in his abdomen.

Pete's latest bout of treatment follows his arrest in London last week, in an incident which sent Kate, 32, into a furious rage.

She says she'll dump him unless he cleans up his act and was left fuming after he was picked up on suspicion of possessing crack.

Pete yesterday checked out of the Oeiras clinic near Lisbon, accompanied by a British doctor, who's thought to have been hired by Kate to keep an eye on her lover.

The skint singer was due back in London last night after almost a week of treatment, courtesy of minted catwalk queen Kate.

His bill will have run into thousands - each implant costs around £600. The cost of accommodation, flights, medical care and treatment will have hiked the tally.

But the barefoot wildman didn't appear too grateful to his girlfriend as he checked out of his hotel.

The pair had a "heated" phone conversation before Pete slammed the handset down.

Massive

An onlooker said: "The implant doesn't seem to have done much to improve his temper. Pete was behaving very aggressively."

"He was chatting to Kate and at one point things got quite heated and he threw the handset down."

Pete has so far had three previous implants fitted - the last at the same clinic in Portugal - but none has worked for any length of time.

Last year he went through "cold turkey" detox with Kate by his side after she gave him an ultimatum: "It's the drugs or me".

He then had the first implant fitted, which was working - only for Pete to admit to falling off the wagon and going on a massive "crack bender".

He got another a few months later, but ended up selling it on eBay.

The naltrexone implant works by taking away the effects of heroin so users feel no pleasure from a "hit". But it can't stop an addict craving a fix or using drugs like crack.

A pal of the ex-Libertine said: "Kate's putting everything into keeping Pete away from that scene and he goes and gets arrested."

"He was desperate to do whatever it took to calm her down and went out to Portugal to give the heroin implant another go."

"He has had a lot of problems with them in the past, but has found them useful. But he's ended up getting back on drugs when he's been doing Babyshambles gigs."

"Pete's just hoping this time it will work and he can stay on the wagon for more than a few weeks."

The substance found on Doherty by police last week is now being analysed. He has been told to return to Bethnal Green Police Station in east London next month.

He is due in court in December over another drug-related incident.

Burns baby's lifeline

DOCTORS treating a baby who suffered 95% burns after hot water pipes burst above her cot are hoping a new skin graft technique can save her life.

Nine-month-old Rhianna Hardie is in a critical condition at Bristol Royal Hospital for Children and has been given only a 20% chance of survival.

Medics are hoping to grow new skin from the area that wasn't burnt.

Her family, from Taunton, Somerset, have been warned she may die at any time within the next six months.

Grandmother Kathleen McKenzie, 47, said: "The new skin growth is her only hope."

"She's a little fighter and we're hoping that the fact she's managed to survive eight days is a sign that she will pull through."

Rhianna's parents Charlene Haworth, 23, and Matthew Hardie, 27, and two-year-old sister had moved into the council house just a day before the accident.

Couple horror

A WOMAN was stabbed to death yesterday near a museum balcony where a man plunged to his death.

Police last night said they were not looking for anyone else in connection with the deaths.

The man died after plunging from a third-storey balcony inside the World Museum in Liverpool city centre.

The woman was found nearby.

The pair, believed to be in their late teens or early 20s, had yet to be named last night.

A Merseyside Police spokesman said that the woman's injuries were not self-inflicted and the couple knew each other.

Rio raid on Brits

THIEVES armed with automatic rifles and grenades robbed a busload of British tourists in Rio de Janeiro yesterday.

It was the latest incident in a wave of violent crime plaguing Brazil's seaside tourist mecca.

Police said four armed men pretending to be police stopped the tour bus as it pulled up in a wealthy part of the city.

At least 18 Brits who had just landed lost their luggage, passports and cash.

One of them was hit in the head with the butt of a rifle as he resisted the robbers' demands.

The robbery took place near Rio's famed Ipanema beach, where police and drug traffickers took part in a prolonged shootout this week.

MOTOR mad James Ford has turned his battered old Ford Capri into a real collector's item by sticking over 4,000 toy cars on to it.

James, 26, from Clapham, south west London, bought the motor for £99. Now he plans to sell it as a work of art.

He said: "I reckon it could raise about £20,000 in the end."

TIME TO GET THE PARTY STARTED

Xmas drinks bonanza as beer wars kick off

REVELLERS are gearing up for a huge Christmas bender as booze prices plummet.

The cost of top-selling drinks is at its lowest level ever.

Britain's best-selling lager Stella Artois is on sale at Morrisons at just 11p per 100ml (62.48p a pint).

The store is also selling 40 440ml cans for just £20.

Last November, the lowest price for Stella was 13p per 100ml at Asda (73.84p a pint).

Richard Clarke, of The Grocer magazine, said: "It just begs the question, given that you would expect the competition between supermarkets to get even fiercer before Christmas, just how low can prices go?"

Drinkers were last night raising a glass to the price cuts. Neil Stevenson, 28, from Manchester, said: "I was going to go on a booze cruise to France. But if prices are falling like this I won't have to."

Mark Hastings, of the British Beer and Pub Association, called on supermarkets to curb their heavy discounts. He said: "We believe this strays over the border into irresponsible promotional practices."

Codes

"We would like to see supermarkets restrained by the same codes on responsible promotions as the pub trade."

But a Morrisons spokesman said: "We want to help customers prepare in advance for the festive season."

Meanwhile, Sainsbury's yesterday launched a week-long offer of 25% off wine or champagne when customers buy six bottles or more.

BECKS: Perfect eyebrows

Lashing out on surgery

FANS desperate to look like their favourite celebs are splashing out on a new cosmetic surgery craze - eyebrow transplants.

The eye-watering £2,000 procedure plucks follicles from the back of the scalp and sews them onto the brows or eyelashes.

They can be shaped to look like any star's and experts predict David Beckham's brows and Penélope Cruz's lashes will be the biggest sellers.

The hairy technique was originally designed for burn victims but UK hair transplant specialist Dr Richard Rogers said that most procedures are now done on ordinary people. "They don't require the transplant because they have alopecia, but because they have overplucked in the past," he said.

off yesterday for the first time was also likened to a dodgy Fast Show cut.

But cries of "It doesn't suit you sir!" greeted him when he turned out at St James's Park.

Laughter rang around the Newcastle United stands as James took to the field showing off a heavily gelled look, with a left-hand parting, also similar to the leering clothes shop workers played by comics Paul Whitehouse, 48, and Mark Williams, 47.

One fan said of the Portsmouth stopper: "I couldn't believe it when I saw what he'd done to his hair."

Saucy

"He looked like one of the saucy tailors from The Fast Show. People were shouting out 'Suits you sir'."

"He's had some horror hairstyles in the past, but this really takes the biscuit."

James, 36, is well known for a series of radical cuts.

Previously he's sported an Afro and a flat-top poodle.

One fan said: "He must have been watching too much X Factor. It looked like he was paying tribute to Eton Road."

Another fan joked he was modelling himself on Adolf Hitler look-alike Ron Mael in the band Sparks.

Parents lose out on £1bn

SINGLE parents will miss out on £1 billion of unpaid child support under plans to write off old debts.

About 130,000 families will be hit if the disastrous Child Support Agency (CSA) gives up on "uncollectable" arrears owed by absent parents.

Janet Allbeson, of the charity One Parent Families, fumed: "Lone parents are incredibly angry that many cases are deemed 'out of time' because of CSA inaction over the years."

The CSA will be replaced by a smaller body to collect child maintenance.

REMEMBER THE 27th OF NOVEMBER

Today's your unlucky day

FORGET Friday the 13th - today is officially Britain's unluckiest day of the year.

by EMMA WALL

Expert research has revealed that Monday the 27th is the day when accidents are most likely to happen.

The worrying statistic came to light in an AA Insurance study of a million claims.

It discovered that people were more likely to have an accident on Monday 27th than any other day of the year.

Now experts have warned that November's stormy weather and dark nights could make today's Monday the 27th even more dangerous than usual.

Kevin Sinclair, managing director of AA Insurance, said: "Friday 13th is associated with bad luck, but our records show you're statistically more likely to have an accident or break something on Monday 27th."

The experts' study uncovered an alarming catalogue of calamities that have happened on Monday the 27th.

The curse struck a man whose leg plunged through the ceiling as he put Christmas decorations in the loft.

Fluke

A woman's luck ran out when she left a tap running and flooded her house.

And a fluke fire started after a cat knocked over a candle.

Other "disasters" included accidents and DIY problems. Driving can also be dangerous, with cars crashing to avoid animals, colliding in car parks and being hit by falling tree branches.

Friday 13th is traditionally thought to have been the unluckiest day in the calendar.

Fear of the date even has its own name - paraskavedekatriaphobia. But the origin of the superstition is unclear.

The number 13 was originally considered unlucky as it represented devil worship.

It could also be linked to the Bible, where Eve defies God and bites into the apple on a Friday.

SMASHING TIME: Today is bad for accidents

HOST: Llewelyn-Bowen

Holiday is over at BBC

by EMMA WALL

THE Beeb's travel show Holiday is packing its bags and heading off into the sunset.

The longest-running tourism programme on British telly - currently hosted by Laurence Llewelyn-Bowen, 41 - has been axed after 37 years.

In the past it was presented by Cliff Michelmore, 86, Frank Bough, 73, Anneka Rice, 48, Des Lynam, 64, and the late Jill Dando.

But in recent years babes including Cat Deeley, 30, Jayne Middlemiss, 35, Carol Smillie, 44, and even movie beauty Cameron Diaz, 34, have appeared.

Pity

Charlie's Angel Cameron appeared in 2003, fronting a piece about the threat to a rainforest from a proposed dam in Belize.

One disappointed fan said: "The beach scenes really brightened up the winter months. If they'd had more babes like Cat and Cameron on they'd never have had to axe it."

Former presenter John Carter, who appeared until 1987, said: "It's a real pity. There was nothing like it before we started and it was a great programme in its heyday."

"The travel industry hated us at first because nobody had dared criticise them before."

It will be replaced by daily magazine programme The One Show.

Big Bro's listening

NEW CCTV cameras will detect arguments in the street before fights start.

They will be fitted with microphones alerting cops to aggressive behaviour.

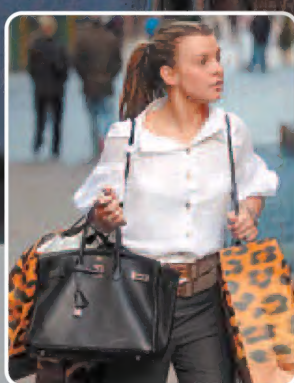

But it will add to fears of a Big Brother state, with each of us already filmed an average 300 times a day.

Police and councils are considering using the gadgets to monitor voices up to 100 yards away.

About 300 devices are already used in Holland, where in one incident they foiled a gang of four about to attack a passer-by.

But an Association of Chief Police Officers spokesman said: "There would be legal obstacles with this new technology."

Mucca stirs the pot with Linda-style restaurants

by MARIANNA PARTASIDES

LOVE split Heather Mills has stirred up another Macca feud after claims she plans a chain of veggie restaurants.

Ex-model Heather has been accused of trying to rip off Linda McCartney with an idea for vegan-only eateries in America, sources have said.

Sir Paul and Linda's children, including top fashion designer Stella, 35, are said to be furious.

They fear that Heather is trying to win sympathy by copying their dead mother's identity.

The 64-year-old ex-Beatle's first wife Linda was a passionate anti-animal cruelty campaigner who launched her own successful brand of vegetarian food.

One source said: "There are rumours that Heather's toying with the idea of opening vegetarian restaurants."

Fury

"But the news has not been very well received in the ranks of Paul's family. It's so similar to Linda's food range."

"They just don't want there to be any association with their mum and her."

"Stella in particular is offended."

The McCartney family fury comes as Heather also faces a wave of hate mail, it has emerged.

Sick messages have reportedly been sent to animal rights and anti-landmines campaigner Heather, 38, via an e-mail link on her own web page.

Last night a source close to Heather said: "She's

VEGGIE PLAN: Heather

CAMPAIGNER: Linda

been heartbroken by the messages which are really cruel.

"She feels she's been labelled the bad guy in the split and she can't do anything about it."

MIKE WARD ON TELLY

TOP TIME-SAVING TIP: If you've taped episode one of Jennifer Saunders' new series Jam And Jerusalem (BBC1, Friday), fast-forward till you're three minutes from the end. That's where she's hidden the funny line.

Toby's got the bum's rush...

ONE by one the potty campers are being booted out. But the I'm A Celebrity evictee I've been saddest to see leave so far is Toby Anstis.

When a contestant is the first one we voters send packing, it kind of looks as though we hate them – or, worse, we haven't actually noticed they're there (a condition known as Mike Read Syndrome).

But I also feel a bit embarrassed about Toby getting this year's wooden spoon – because I'd actually predicted, live on London's LBC, that he'd win the series.

In my defence, I ought to point out, strictly between you and me, that I didn't mean a word of it. Of course I didn't.

Be real. I'd only said it because Toby happens to work for Heart, LBC's sister station, and they'd put me on the spot.

In truth, let's face it, the bloke stood about as much chance as the Duchess of Kent.

My expert view is that two specific factors guaranteed Toby's early exit:

1. He'd made such a song and dance, just hours earlier, about his first proper bowel movement since arriving. "I've had a poo!" he screamed joyfully to the whole camp. I'm amazed he didn't fish it out and pass it round on a paper doily.
2. He hadn't faced the terror of a Bush Tucker Trial.

Had he done the second of those things, of course, his first little problem would have fixed itself a whole lot sooner.

THE tragically doomed Pauline Fowler was moaning away in Friday night's EastEnders (BBC1). "It won't be long," she whined, "before I'm shoved away in a home somewhere."

There, there, love – I promise it won't come to that...

How Dan stupid!

JAMIE AND FRANKIE GIVE GAME AWAY

WHAT lousy, pig-awful luck, eh? Coronation Street's Jamie and step-mum Frankie spend weeks ensuring Danny won't suss their affair.

Then they're caught out by the unlikely twist of fate.

Who could have possibly guessed it might be risky for them to start humping away like rabbits at Danny's own flat?

I mean, Danny was down the Rovers at a darts match, wasn't he?

No way could they have imagined that he'd eventually, you know, come home – or anything crazily unpredictable as that.

Chance in a million, right? Yeah, right. The daft, dopey buggers.

Still, every cloud has a silver lining. And two very positive things have emerged from this mess.

First, discovering the sordid truth has turned Danny entertainingly deranged. I've always liked Danny Baldwin a lot, but it was high time we got a bit more from him than his cocky Cockney appies 'n' bleed-in' pears routine.

And killing is good. Not in everyday life, I should stress, where apparently it's illegal, but certainly in Soapland.

Which brings us to positive point No.2 – because, even though Jamie has so far survived Danny's hilariously explosive reaction, it warns your very cockles to see that moronic mop-head taking such a richly-deserved pasting.

For pure entertainment, his near-drowning was first class – although obviously to be upgraded to club class it needed to lose the "near" bit.

Without giving too much away, plot-wise, I can tell you Jamie and Frankie are still a long way from being able to embark on a normal relationship.

In fact, it'll be a miracle if they ever do. Not a very healthy miracle at that.

Ultimately, how can Jamie ever get it out of his polluted head that Frankie is the woman who used to read him a bedtime story every night?

You know, I've a nasty feeling he actually doesn't want to. I fear she's left him totally tucked up.

Chipper Richard

WHAT the hell is that huge tattoo on the back of Linda's dodgy husband Richard in Strictly Confidential (ITV1, Thursday)? It looks like a whopping great bar code.

Mind you, wouldn't that be a comfort for the anxious Linda? Maybe Richard isn't, as she fears, a love rat, perv or murderer.

Whizz him through the scanner and she'll probably find he's just a bag of oven chips.

SEPARATED AT BIRTH? Top Gear's James May, boozing it up big-time in the hilarious new travel series Oz & James's Big Wine Adventure (BBC2, Wednesday), and EastEnders' beetroot-faced waster Keith Miller.

The complexions are scheduled to match by episode three.

IT'S Me Or The Fat Dog (Channel 4, Tuesday). Hang on a minute, wasn't that the working title for Blind Date?

Nokia his block off

MY Golden Baseball Bat, which I occasionally award to profoundly annoying blokes in TV ads, makes a welcome return this week.

On its receiving end is a guy from one of Nokia's X Factor sponsorship thingummies. You'll know the one I mean.

There's this woman who accidentally drops her mobile phone over the edge of her balcony, like you do – prompting the bloke to play the superhero by rushing to catch it before it smashes on the ground. But that's not the bit that irritates the hell out of me.

No, what sends me a smug smile, matry yells up to her: "Is this yours?"

No pal, it's Bruce sodding Springsteen's, isn't it? Who the hell's do you think it is, you jibbering cretin?

Or do you live in a neighbourhood where mobiles rain from the sky with such regularity that you just can't keep track of whose is whose?

Next time, stick to: "Clumsy bint."

PAY OFF EARLY

Wouldn't it be great to see your mortgage shrink before your very eyes - until one day it disappeared altogether? Well now you can make it happen.

Different approach

The One account offers a different approach to your finances that allows you to shrink both your mortgage and your monthly repayment. It does this by combining your mortgage and your current account, so that every penny of your money works towards reducing the size of your home loan.

When you pay your monthly salary and any savings into the account, your mortgage debt immediately shrinks and so does the interest you repay each month. This has exactly the same effect as overpaying your mortgage, except you don't have to pay any extra. You could even see your mortgage shrink in size from one month to the next.

You are also free to overpay whenever you have cash to spare, and if you have any savings you can pay those in as well to help shrink your mortgage even faster. One day you might find your mortgage has shrunk so much it completely disappears, years ahead of schedule. Just imagine life with an ever shrinking mortgage. All that extra cash to spend on enjoying yourself, or to save for your future.

Nicola hard at work

TOP MARKS FOR THE ONE ACCOUNT

NICOLA LOUGHRAN, 26 discovered the terrific benefits of the One account when she was offered voluntary redundancy from her job at the Post Office. "I was keen to accept because I wanted to train to set up my own business and I couldn't do that while working full time."

Nicola switched her mortgage to the One account and paid her £10,000 redundancy payout straight in, immediately shrinking her mortgage. After paying in the money Nicola's repayment fell by £150 a month. "This gave me real breathing space to take a year off to go to college to study bookkeeping and accounts full-time, and learn everything about starting a business."

No worries

Nicola's husband James, 27, works as a mechanic, and she hopes to help him set up his own garage next year. "Thanks to the One account, if things are a bit tough in the first year we don't have to worry, as long as we clear the mortgage by the end of the term but we'd like to clear it as soon as possible."

And you could join them by checking out the One account's online Mortgage Shrinker - which shows in simple detail how you can shrink your mortgage. All you need to do is go online and tap in some personal details. You'll see how much you can save and how much sooner you can pay off your mortgage.
